

It'll Shake Your Head

Comedy Idea

Jonathan D. Steinhoff 11.7.11

His new scientific theory that explains political behavior has caused Larry, the Geologist of the Mind, to become extremely interesting to people, perhaps to such a degree that even a news show might wish to discuss this theory with him.

News Anchor

Larry, the Geologist of the Mind, it's so great that you could be our guest here today.

Larry, the Geologist of the Mind

It's wonderful to be here.

News Anchor

Larry – do you mind if I call you Larry? Larry, can you tell us this theory of yours, and, is this correct, you do see it as a political theory, right?

Larry, the Geologist of the Mind

Yes, it is a political theory. Politics, in terms of whether a person chooses to vote Left or Right, this originates from invisible tectonic plates in the sky, as if our minds had a world of their own to gravitate towards. But then, BOOM, a shift in an invisible tectonic plate in the sky occurs. Before we know what happened, a Republican gets elected.

News Anchor

Invisible tectonic plates in the sky. Okay, that IS a good theory. And you believe this is what causes people to vote politically left or right?

Larry, the Geologist of the Mind

By generating what is in essence a COSMIC headache, from invisible pressure applied by the shifting tectonic plates to SPECIAL places in the brain, there isn't even a name for these places, who can keep track, right? So then people yield to the political left or the political right, under the cosmic pressure to the brain, as everyone is built differently. These shifts of the plates in the sky, they can get to be a truly big headache for the world.

News Anchor

And have you made a prediction for who will become president in 2012?

Larry, the Geologist of the Mind

You will laugh, but I'm predicting: Martha Stewart. See, the pressure that will come upon us from the invisible, shifting tectonic plates in the sky (did I mention they shift around?), acting on our minds, or what exists between our minds and what our minds are gravitating towards, only Martha Stewart will be a softness the nation will be able to agree on. Ha, as if SHE could address a headache like the one coming our way.

News Anchor

Yes, of course! Martha Stewart! Larry, the Geologist of the Mind, everyone! Thank you, Larry!

The End
